

America's Prettiest Girls Richmond

BY HENRY TYRRELL.

NOT so long ago we should have referred to these patrician beauties who represent Virginia's capital as "Daughters of the Confederacy." Today, while doubtless they still cherish in their hearts the proper pride attached to such a designation, its reminiscence of sectional animosities long since quelled in patriotism, kindness and hospitality is too narrow for true characterization of the modern young women of the F. F. V.'s.

They have the traditional fire and fervor, as well as beauty, just the same. Never are they quite so irresistible as when flushed with the glamour of the Old Dominion's heroic past. Sometimes at a fancy dress function these Richmond girls will array themselves in the antique silks, satins and laces, the silver girdles and Queen Anne coiffures their great-great-grandmothers wore at Westover, Shirley, Brandon, the storied ancestral manor houses along the James.
